Major Gains Noted In Morgan Wing Opening

Among those most excited over the opening of the new wing at Peninsula General Hospital are many members of the medical staff. They see the wing as a highly important addition to the community in that it brings a facility for diagnostic study which should result in three major things:

1. Eliminate the necessity for people of the area to go to larger diagnostic centers in metropolitan areas for any type of cardiac and pulmonary diagnostic study.
2. By making these facilities of diagnosis available, open the possibility of future new therapeutic measures.
3. Make possible a very broad and sophisticated teaching program that eventually could be enlarged upon and be the beginning of education for medical students, as well as offer the full range of postgraduate medical training.

heart and blood vessels. These studies will include the full gamut of congenital heart disease, especially important in the case of infants, and the tremendous number of patients who have coronary artery disease, one of the great killers among adults. These studies are extremely important for two reasons: The large number of patients involved, and the fact that so many of them are in the most productive period of their lives.

"WITH THE new facility," the doctor said, "we will be able to take X-Ray pictures of the coronary vessels and in so doing will be able to advise people as to the presence or absence of disease, the degree of disease that they have, and their ultimate prognosis so far as a time relationship is concerned. And if surgical therapeutics prove themselves helpful to these individuals, we can make a selection as to who should have surgical procedures and eventually, we would hope, enlarge upon this to conduct the therapeutic procedures. These types of sophisticated evaluation of cardiac function have, until the past few years, been totally unavailable and for the past two or three years were available only in university medical centers.

"A third important aspect of this new wing is that by allowing us to do these more sophisticated and ultramodern diagnostic studies both in heart disease and lung disease, we can simultaneously deliver the best possible medical care to our patients and serve as a fourth year medical student and fourth year medical students an supply this area with the sophistication necessary to maintain a training program for young doctors in the field of medicine.

"If this third possibility should come to fruition, it would go a long way in solving our health care problem and the delivery of health care in the Lower Shore, because most assuredly some of these doctors who train here would want to stay here."

The facilities in the cardiac catheterization laboratory will allow the taking of motion pictures of the heart function, both the ability of the heart to act as a pump, and the blood supply of the heart muscle itself. Not only will these functions be recorded on film, but they will be put on a video tape

Another study now available is the taking of X-Rays of the heart and lung patients here.
